Choosing the Right Graduation Stream for IAS

Students should choose Humanities subjects like Political Science, History, or Public Administration because they have a significant overlap with the IAS syllabus. These subjects cover important topics related to governance, history, society, and international relations, which are crucial for the UPSC Prelims and Mains exams. Studying these subjects in graduation allows students to understand core concepts in depth, making their UPSC preparation smoother. Since these subjects are part of General Studies papers, students who choose them get a natural advantage in the exam.

However, any graduation stream works as long as students remain dedicated and disciplined in their UPSC preparation. Engineering, Medical, Commerce, and Science students have also cleared the IAS exam with the right approach. The key is to balance college studies with UPSC preparation and ensure that core subjects like history, polity, economics, and geography are studied alongside.
