So, it ultimately depends on you. There is nothing wrong in starting during the mid-20s. We have observed many success stories who got top UPSC ranks. Some of them are 30 plus years. If you are in college, do not spend all your time in IAS preparation. Your academic plans keep changing for a certain period. So, make sure you also focus on academic studies. Balance your time for studying both academics as well as IAS. Otherwise, you will end up with disappointment. It is good to prepare for IAS at an early age. However, you should not make it a primary goal. Keep it as second preference. Your main focus should be on academic studies only.

Important things to know Before You Prepare for IAS

Now you know about when to start IAS preparation. Next, what are the things you need to get started? Decide this point as per the age and academic background you own. Basically, the IAS exam has 2 main stages. It includes prelims and mains. Firstly, you should clear the prelims phase. Here, you have 2 papers namely GS and CSAT. Again, in mains, you have to write for GS and optional papers. So, the syllabus is huge. You need a good plan to begin. Understand what the requirement is and prioritize your studies.

Are You in School? Then, what should you prepare at this stage?

By now, you are aware of all the stages of the exam. Also, you have understood the important subjects and topics to be prepared. Itâ??s time to learn about the preparation plan. We have assumed that you are in schools. If not, please move on to the next section. As a first step, you focus on current affairs. It builds your knowledge base. It helps you in future years during the full-time IAS preparation. To prepare for current affairs, start reading the newspaper. Make it a habit! However, there is no need to make any notes from newspaper. It is not needed.

Just get into practice and enjoy reading. If you get bored to read continuously, we have an idea. Mix up the serious articles with fun-based articles. For example, it can be about movies, sports, and entertainment. Ultimately, develop the love for reading newspapers. After articles, start reading the editorial section on the newspaper. In the initial stages, you will find this difficult. Even elders will find it difficult. Thatâ??s not a problem. But never leave the practice.

Improving your general knowledge awareness is extremely important. It helps you to perform well in both prelims and mains. Do not go for any kind of notes for this portion. Pick up one good reference book and one good magazine. It should be sufficient. You can also skip reading magazines as of now, to begin with. Your aim is to just read. Read whatever topics you like in the book. Do not restrict yourself with any preparation strategies right now. Enjoy what you read! If you are in school, you will have NCERT books. So, read these books very well. It is an excellent book to start with preparation.

Are you in college? Then what should you prepare at this stage?
